

‘What is research.iversity?’

research.iversity is an interdisciplinary workspace, especially designed for the requirements of scientists and researchers.

The platform supports and simplifies both individual and collaborative working.

Firstly, each researcher may create an own portfolio by adding his personal information, self description and curriculum vitae. Working papers, journal articles, and links can be posted in order to represent and administrate ones own academic profile and interact with others.

Secondly, research.iversity provides specific tools in order to collaborate with fellow researchers. You may create or join a specific research project, and in turn invite other researchers to join. On each project level messages may be exchanged, data may be shared and administrated, and events, news, and appointments may be posted. In order to spin off the general research project, smaller work groups may be created – in order to promote conference proceedings or advance publications with a limited number of co-authors, for example.

Each project as well as work group is guaranteed the highest amount of privacy fulfilments. The administrators of each project and work group may decide whether the group is public or password protected. In password protected groups each member of the group can individually decide which of his data is addressed to a wider public or destined for internal disposition, only. Anyhow, the settings can be adjusted easily, so that documents and comments may be shared or not.
