

Decolonising the Business School Curriculum

Following global protests, issues of race and the legacy of colonialism are more pressing than ever. Universities around the world have been asked “How can they decolonise their curriculum”.

In this virtual workshop, we will explore what it means to decolonize the business school curriculum? We will work together to start the practical work of decolonising the curriculum. Small groups of people from around the world will work on designing decolonised curriculum for courses typically taught in business schools. These will include: international business, entrepreneurship, human resource management, leadership, consumer behaviour, social marketing, branding and corporate social responsibility.

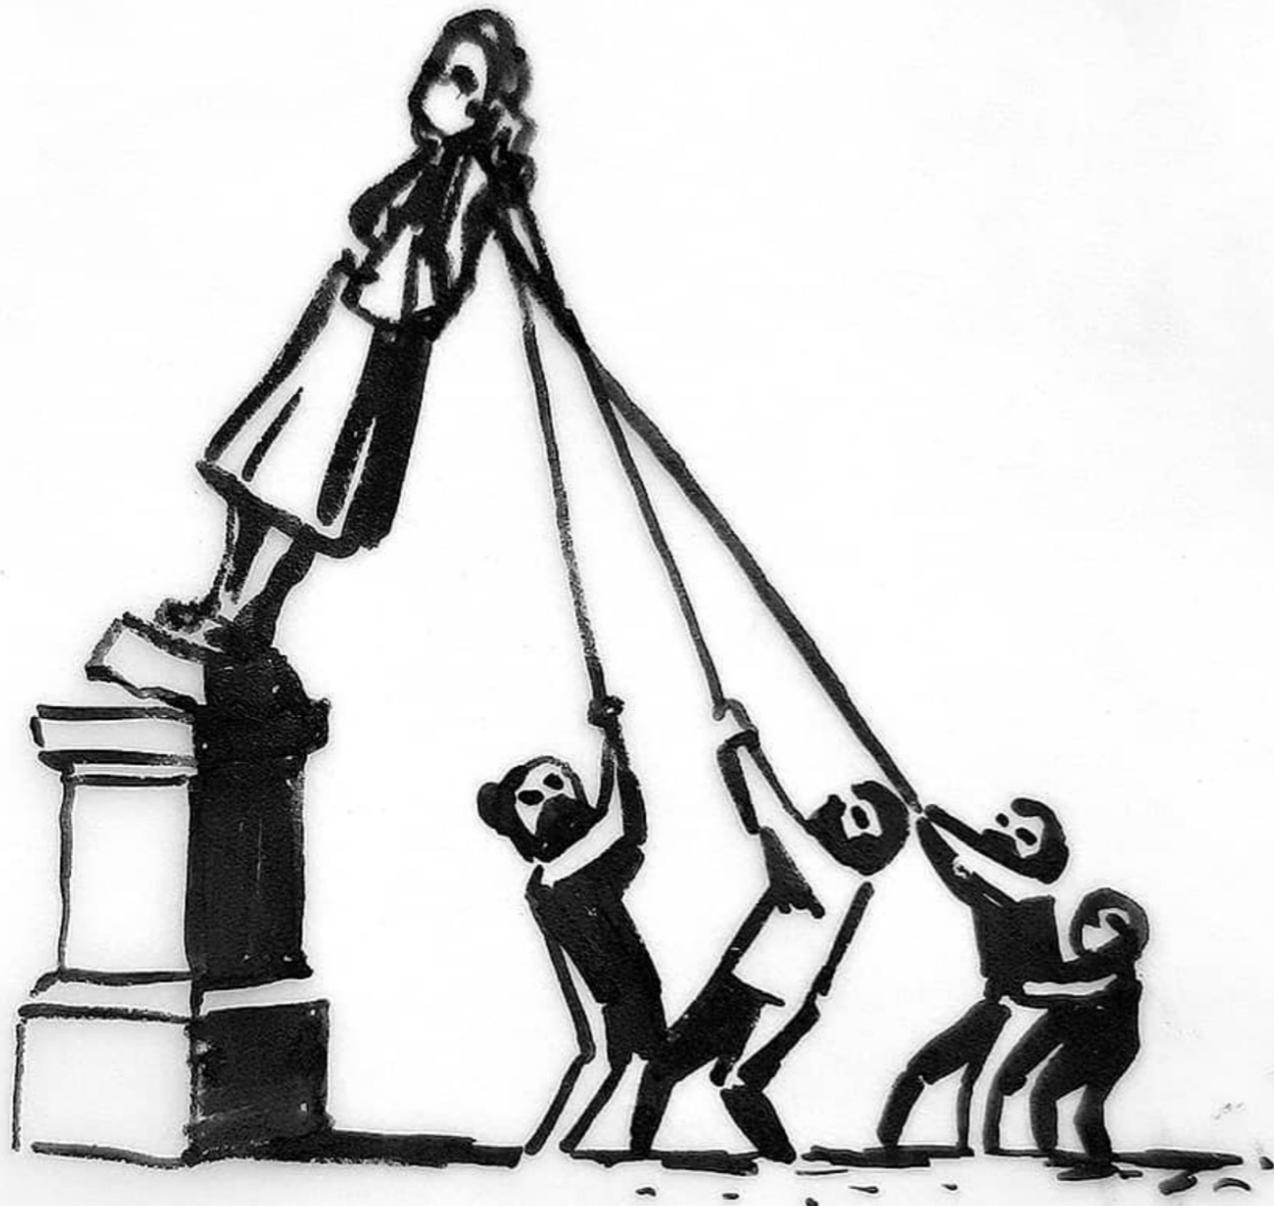

The workshop will be useful for people teaching in business schools. It will give participants an opportunity to start making practical change in what we teach in business schools around the world

Panellists include: Dara Kelly (Simon Fraser University), Stella Nkomo (University of Pretoria), Nceku Nyathi (Royal Holloway University of London), Rohit Varman (University of Birmingham).

The event is host by: ETHOS, City, University of London and CRIS, Royal Holloway, University of London. 4:30-6:30 pm BST, January 28, 2021. Held Virtually. Places are limited. Please register early.

Sign-up Here.

Decolonising the Business School Curriculum

Following global protests, issues of race and the legacy of colonialism are more pressing than ever. Universities around the world have been asked “How can they decolonise their curriculum”.

In this virtual workshop, we will explore what it means to decolonize the business school curriculum? We will work together to start the practical work of decolonising the curriculum. Small groups of people from around the world will work on designing decolonised curriculum for courses typically taught in business schools. These will include: international business, entrepreneurship, human resource management, leadership, consumer behaviour, social marketing, branding and corporate social responsibility.

The workshop will be useful for people teaching in business schools. It will give participants an opportunity to start making practical change in what we teach in business schools around the world

Panellists include: Dara Kelly (Simon Fraser University), Stella Nkomo (University of Pretoria), Nceku Nyathi (Royal Holloway University of London), Rohit Varman (University of Birmingham).

The event is host by: ETHOS, City, University of London and CRIS, Royal Holloway, University of London. 4:30-6:30 pm BST, January 28, 2021. Held Virtually. Places are limited. Please register early.

Sign-up: <https://bit.ly/2JRjsje>